

IN-HOUSE OR OUTSOURCE?

Can an employer effectively manage their unemployment program in-house? The answer is YES. However, in order to effectively manage this process, an employer must have the time, knowledge base, and necessary tools in order to take full advantage of all available savings.

Considering today's demands on human resource and payroll professionals, it's understandably difficult for them to effectively manage an in-house program. As costs associated with unemployment continue to rise, it has become imperative for each employer to ensure that all saving opportunities are realized.

UCA's unemployment cost control program typically produces greater savings for employers – and at less expense – than their in-house programs. Because unemployment cost control is all we do, employers can depend on UCA to maintain the systems and expertise to provide them with the most cost-effective program available.

Unlike the "cookie-cutter" approach of others within the industry, UCA's proven program can be customized to the needs of each employer, enabling clients to create unemployment cost control solutions that achieve their specific goals.

What others are saying:

"Jason and the team at UC Advantage are fantastic. Their employees are very helpful and knowledgeable. Since working with them, we now have a 91% win rate on protestable claims across all of our companies across all states. They helped us reduce our unemployment tax rate in Illinois by 2.5% last year. I highly recommend UC Advantage to any company looking to improve their unemployment claim administration and win rate." Heather, Vonachen Group.
